WOMEN OF FAITH'S ACTION TO ADDRESS TRIPLE ENVIRONMENTAL PLANETARY CRISIS

INTRODUCTION

Faith actors (this term encompasses faith leaders, faith-based organisations and institutions, faith communities, people of faith, and others) have a moral duty of stewardship and environmental care to advocate for balance with nature as an act of reverence. The call to address pollution, and other environmental challenges, is based on core values and principles like stewardship, compassion, justice, and balance.

Women of faith are key actors in environment protection, as well as inclusive governance, freedom of religion or belief (FoRB), and building resilient, peaceful societies. In recognition of this essential role in faith-led sustainability efforts, the United Nations Environment Programme proudly launched the Interfaith Women's Council, amplifying diverse voices in global environmental decision-making.

Together, they serve as a collective moral voice within the Faith for Earth Coalition. The Council advises UNEP on gender dimensions of environmental issues and works to ensure that women of faith are present and heard in key global forums. It is a space for collaboration, solidarity, and influence, not only within UNEP but across the wider ecosystem of interfaith and environmental actors.

INTRODUCTION – WHY THIS COUNCIL, WHY NOW

The climate crisis and environmental degradation continue to deepen existing inequalities, especially for women and girls. But women of faith are not only vulnerable to these changes. They are leading responses grounded in care, justice, and spiritual wisdom. The Interfaith Women's Council recognises that these women must be more than participants, they must be leaders.

The Council exists to amplify the moral and practical leadership of women of faith. It brings together diverse women from across spiritual traditions to influence environmental policy, shape global dialogue, and drive transformative action that centres justice. It is built on the understanding that achieving climate and ecological goals requires recognising how gender, faith, and environmental justice are deeply connected.

OUR GUIDING PRINCIPLES – THE VALUES THAT SHAPE OUR WORK

Women Leadership: We celebrate and support the leadership of women in faith communities, advocating for their full participation in shaping inclusive and just futures.

Stewardship: We embrace our responsibility to care for the Earth as a sacred trust, ensuring that creation is protected and sustained for future generations.

Dignity: We uphold the sacred worth of every individual, drawing from human rights frameworks and spiritual teachings that affirm our shared humanity.

Gender Justice: We recognise gender equality as both a moral imperative and a foundational requirement for achieving sustainable development and climate justice.

Equity: We commit to dismantling systemic barriers and ensuring that all people, regardless of background or identity, have fair access to resources, power, and opportunity.

Compassion: Guided by the ethical values of our faiths, we act with empathy and care in response to human suffering and environmental degradation.

Intergenerational Solidarity: We honour the wisdom of elders and nurture the innovation of youth, working together across generations to foster lasting transformation.

Collaboration: We build bridges across faiths, cultures, and sectors, knowing that inclusive partnerships are essential for meaningful and lasting change.

GENDER INCLUSIVITY IS KEY IN THE TRIPLE ENVIRONMENTAL PLANETARY CRISIS

CLIMATE CHANGE

Climate change impacts are different for men and women due to existing gender dynamics and inequalities and like most other challenges in humanitarian and developmental spheres, women are disproportionately negatively affected.

Women should not only be considered victims of climate change but also as agents of change. To promote gender equality and women's empowerment throughout the process, involving women in decision-making for climate action is essential, as it ensures the integration of their knowledge and experiences regarding climate change. This enriches the discourse with diverse perspectives and talents.

Research underscores women's willingness to invest more than men in environmentally friendly transportation and their heightened focus on eco-friendly products. They exhibit greater awareness of energy conservation and natural resource preservation. Moreover, women leaders across industries are already demonstrating a commitment to sustainable business practices with positive societal impacts. This change can occur at all levels, spanning households, communities, businesses, and politics.

Therefore, among women within faith communities, they are often the leaders in climate solutions and in influencing community awareness as to the threat of climate change. They are also actors of local engagement and key bridges between interfaith groups.

BIODIVERSITY LOSS

As the main suppliers of water, food and energy at home and in society, women in rural areas are particularly sensitive to changes in the supply and quality of these resources. Therefore, scarcity of natural resources due to climate change, pollution and overexploitation of natural resources means that women and girls must walk longer distances to collect firewood and water and access new farmlands. Moreover, it reduces the amount of time they can spend on 'productive' and 'self-improvement' activities, such as generating an income or gaining new skills or knowledge.

Women of faith can be instrumental leaders in defending land from environmental degradation. They matter as they can mobilize and inspire broad collective action in restoration. In addition, their leadership ensures collective stewardship and empowers their group, which is the most directly affected by biodiversity degradation.

POLLUTION

Women are generally disproportionately impacted by exposure to chemicals and waste and have less access to participation in decision making. Women and men are impacted differently by hazardous chemicals and waste and gender inequalities exacerbate these differences. They are also impacted throughout the product lifecycle.

Women in faith play critical roles in achieving a pollution-free planet in decision making about pollution prevention, waste management and building safer environments. They have both knowledge and expertise, whose recognition can lead to more efficient, effective, sustainable, and fair waste management operations.

UNEP'S STRATEGY FOR MAINSTREAMING GENDER

UNEP has developed a comprehensive Policy and Strategy for Gender Equality and the Environment, which provides a complete gender mainstreaming policy statement and operational framework to guide the organization's work. This ensures that women's as well as men's concerns and experiences are an integral dimension of the design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of climate action policies so that inequality is not perpetuated.

UNEP's strategy takes on two frames of focus:

- Gendered vulnerabilities to climate change
Due to existing gender dynamics and inequalities, women are disproportionately affected. In our climate actions, intersectionality is an important factor to consider that women are at a higher risk of suffering the negative socioeconomic effects of climate change.
- Women as active and effective agents and promoters of climate change adaptation and mitigation
They should not only be considered victims of climate change but also as agents of change. Therefore, involving women in decision-making for climate action is essential, as it ensures the integration of their knowledge and experiences regarding climate change.

FAITH FOR EARTH'S STRATEGY ON GENDER

Faith for Earth Team - June 2025

The Faith for Earth Coalition builds on the recognition that the full, meaningful and equal participation and leadership of women in all aspects of the Coalition's governance and outputs is vital for achieving the targeted impact.

Positive environmental outcomes for women are one important means to ensure sustainability and, in many (faith) communities, women already provide much needed leadership at the local level through their strong engagement in voluntary and charity work that serves the spiritual and practical needs of the communities. Therefore, it is essential that all activities and outputs by the Faith for Earth Coalition incorporate and benefit from the knowledge and leadership of women, while also supporting women as they face today's unprecedented environmental challenges.

Our areas of action for our Gender Strategy:

- Institutional level: Actioning leadership
- Programmatic level: Monitoring and evaluation of the implementation of identified gender actions

FAITH FOR EARTH INTERFAITH WOMEN COUNCIL

LAUNCH OF THE INTERFAITH WOMEN COUNCIL 2025

On 30 January 2025, UNEP Faith for Earth Coalition launched the Interfaith Women Council, a high-level platform bringing together 27 women faith leaders from over 16 religious traditions. The inaugural meeting, attended by UNEP Executive Director Inger Andersen and Law Division Director Dr. Patricia Mbote, affirmed the Council's strategic role in advancing gender equality and faith-based leadership in environmental governance. To support its outreach, UNEP launched a dedicated Council website

Since its formation, the Council has contributed to UNEP's thematic campaigns, including the International Day for Biodiversity, and is actively engaging in upcoming initiatives for World Environment Day.

On 28 August 2025, the Council co-hosted a joint webinar with the Faith for Earth Youth Council and Steering Committee, focusing on strengthening interfaith, intergenerational, and gender-inclusive collaboration as part of the Faith for Earth Coalition's engagement with the seventh session of the United Nations Environment Assembly (UNEA-7).

WHAT WE DO - STRATEGIC ROLES OF THE INTERFAITH WOMEN COUNCIL

As part of the Faith for Earth Coalition, the Interfaith Women Council plays several key roles. We advise UNEP and partner networks on gender-environment linkages. We contribute to designing programmes, events, and interventions that centre women's leadership. We provide spiritual and moral perspectives in high-level climate, biodiversity, and sustainability discussions.

We also interact with other Councils under the Coalition – youth, climate, nature, and pollution – to make sure gender is not siloed but integrated throughout. Our members serve as speakers, mentors, and conveners, using their platforms to advance collective environmental goals.

OUR SHARED VISION FOR THE FUTURE

The climate crisis is spiritual, ecological, and political. And it demands leadership that is compassionate, courageous, and collective. The Interfaith Women's Council believes that women of faith are uniquely positioned to lead the transformation we need.

We stand for a world where climate action is gender-just, faith-informed, and community-driven. We are not simply advocates. We are architects of change – building a future where justice, care, and dignity guide our relationship with the Earth and each other.

MAKING OUR VOICES HEARD – ENGAGING IN POLICY AND PUBLIC ARENAS

Council members regularly participate in global platforms, from UNEA to UNFCCC. We speak at side events, engage with member states, contribute to global declarations, and co-host interfaith dialogues. Our role is not symbolic. It is strategic.

Through our networks, we ensure that climate justice includes faith-rooted gender justice. We work to ensure that women faith leaders, whether from rural parishes or major religious institutions, shape the future of sustainable development.

WHY GENDER AND FAITH MATTER - ROOTED IN EVIDENCE, DRIVEN BY URGENCY

Research shows that climate change affects women and girls disproportionately, deepening inequalities in access to water, food, energy, and safety. Yet, as noted by the Grantham Institute, most climate policies still fail to integrate gender meaningfully.

Faith-based communities, often led by women at the grassroots level, are already providing care and solutions from disaster response to conservation to renewable energy transitions. The Council exists to spotlight and scale these actions. When faith and gender are combined, they offer not only deep community trust but also powerful frameworks for justice.

Experience shows that the resilience of households and (faith) communities depends greatly on the resilience of women. Identifying and addressing both women's and men's needs, as well as promoting women as decision makers, are critical elements to ensuring environmental sustainability. It is essential that all activities and outputs by the Faith for Earth Coalition incorporate and benefit from the knowledge and leadership of women, while also supporting women as they face today's unprecedented environmental challenges.

To create a just and sustainable future, the intersection of faith, gender, and environmental action must be recognized not as peripheral, but as central. By uplifting women's leadership and integrating gender-responsive approaches into environmental work, the Faith for Earth Coalition can help create transformative change. Empowering women within faith communities is not only a matter of equity, but it is also a strategic imperative for effective climate action and long-term resilience.

OUR PREVIOUS WORK

FREEDOM OF RELIGION OR BELIEF, GENDER, AND THE SDGS-2019

In October 2019, an expert consultation in Copenhagen brought together global stakeholders to explore the intersections of freedom of religion or belief (FoRB), gender equality, and sustainable development. Sponsored by the governments of Denmark and Norway, and organised by the UN Special Rapporteur on FoRB, OHCHR, the UN Interagency Task Force on Religion and Development, Stefanus Alliance, and the Danish Institute for Human Rights, the dialogue uncovered powerful synergies between gender, climate, and health.

Faith for Earth presented on "Climate Change and Its Impacts on Women and Religious Groups", calling for inclusive, faith-led environmental justice. The event marked a turning point in recognising the need to engage faith-based organisations (FBOs) in broader sustainable development frameworks.

PEOPLE AND PLANET: FAITH IN THE 2030 AGENDA-2020

Held in March 2020, this pioneering flight-free digital conference was convened by SIDA, in collaboration with SIWI, Naturvårdsverket, and UNEP Faith for Earth. The event created six regional hubs across Kenya, South Africa, Indonesia, Lebanon, Sweden, and Bosnia & Herzegovina, uniting participants through virtual and hybrid formats.

The conference deepened connections between faith-based and Indigenous knowledge systems, focusing on climate justice, gender equality, and ecosystem restoration. As the African Regional Hub coordinator, Faith for Earth engaged stakeholders on food insecurity, gender-based discrimination, and the need for gender safeguards in environmental policies.

GENDERED PERSPECTIVES IN SOUTHERN AFRICA-2020

In September 2020, the Research Programme on Religious Communities and Sustainable Development (RCSD) at Humboldt University Berlin partnered with WECARE (PaRD) and Faith for Earth to co-host a virtual Capacity Building Workshop.

Focused on eco-feminism, sustainable agriculture, and eco-theology, the workshop explored gendered roles in ecological sustainability through faith-based approaches. Women leaders from religious communities shared perspectives on their often-underappreciated roles in ecosystem protection and climate resilience, helping reframe ecological sustainability through a gender lens.

GLOBAL LEARNING CONFERENCE- 2021

Marking International Women's Day 2021, Faith for Earth co-organised a global learning conference with SIDA, UN Women, SEI, and the Swedish Dialogue Institute. Regional learning hubs were held in Nairobi, Amman, Bangkok, and Härnösand.

Under the banner "From the Grassroots to the Global", the event showcased how women, religious leaders, and local actors are responding to climate emergencies. A parallel session, Faith Actors Addressing Gendered Impacts of Climate and Conflict Emergencies, provided compelling evidence of faith-based action in times of crisis and reaffirmed the need to amplify women's voices in humanitarian and climate responses.

FAITH SISTERS AT COP28- 2023

In April 2023, the International Union of Superiors General (UISG) invited UNEP Faith for Earth to explore how their 1,900 member congregations representing 600,000 Sisters globally could support environmental policy and the SDGs. The resulting UISG Environment Policy became a key advocacy tool during COP28 and other UN events.

In October, the Faith for Earth Coalition, in partnership with Global One and Wilton Park, hosted a Pre-COP28 Thematic Consultation on Gender-Inclusive Climate Resilience. The consultation examined how women faith leaders can shape decision-making spaces, share resources, and co-develop long-term adaptation strategies rooted in their faith traditions. This laid the groundwork for a more formalised women's mechanism within the Coalition.

LAUNCH OF A GLOBAL MULTI-FAITH WOMEN-LED CLIMATE ACTION NETWORK- 2024

Co-convened by Wilton Park, the British and Irish Embassies to the Holy See, Islamic Relief, and UISG, this 2024 gathering brought together women from 15 countries and 8 faith traditions to launch a global multi-faith women-led climate action network.

The forum focused on practical collaboration, from local project scaling to high-level advocacy. It highlighted the critical role of women's spiritual leadership in achieving climate justice. This momentum directly contributed to the launch of the Interfaith Women's Council in 2025.

INTERNATIONAL DAYS AND OBSERVANCES

The following annual international days and observations present the Interfaith Women's Council and the faith network with an opportunity to mobilise the momentum of the international community, embracing the annual theme of that observance while using their own experiences to contextualize challenges and opportunities.

Day	Observances/Days
11th of February	International Day of Women and Girls in Science
8th of March	International Women's Day
30th of March	International Day of Zero Waste
5th of June	World Environment Day
28th of July	World Nature Conservation Day
11th of October	International Day of the Girl Child
25th of November	International Day for the Elimination of Violence Against Women
10th of December	International Human Rights Day

Note: this is a non-exhaustive list of suggested annual international days to mobilise the network.

CONCLUSION

This Catalogue emphasises how the faith network is strategically positioned as partners and implementers of evidence-based solutions to illustrate how women have led and can lead faith communities towards beneficial climate action. It presents a sample of the wider ongoing movement and yet, these good practices illustrate the versatility of faith-based environmental action:

- FBOs' efforts span a wide range of activities, which include global and local campaigns, policy advocacy, fossil-fuel divestment, research & citizen science, compilation & dissemination of best practices, efforts to green faith festivities, construction of infrastructure for waste treatment, and hands-on cleaning drives.
- Action against pollution is being taken across several regions of the globe, at local and global levels, and led by various faiths, including interfaith organisations, of varied sizes.
- Women in FBOs have the ability to mobilise a large number of material and human resources, especially volunteers, and are using it to deliver significant impact
